Tony, I thought my solution covered both options anyway...
If a translation is provided in language_text.php then it is used - and what is displayed to the end user is consistent across everything they see. If no translation is provided, then the task_id is used. From a developer's perspective the actual help file is still named using the task_id - so is easy to identify for maintenance.

I prefer not to display anything to the end user that is not 'plain English' so would prefer a solution that allows this.
