This is tricky as I don't know the user's time zone until after he/she has logged on, but if the system is in a shutdown state then he/she cannot log on. There is no information available in the HTTP headers, but I've just tried a solution which I think will work.

When a user logs on I set a cookie called 'timezone_client', so this information will always be available on the logon screen. This assumes, of course, that the same device is not used by people in different time zones.

See the attached file for the changed scripts.
