Radicore is a development tool, so you should really be installing it on a development server over which you have total control, such as your own PC.

If your web hosting company insists that the database name is the same as the the user name that can access it then I would change to a company that offers a more professional level of service. Any good web hosting company should allow you to create several databases which can all be accessed with the same user name.

This is not a problem with Radicore, it is a deficiency with your web hosting company.
