Looked through your connect method. Seems like there is a $dbhost variable for mysql_connect.

So I did a 'host:port' and it works.

I think there was an article you wrote about encryption.
The thing about php is, source codes are revealed and the $key has to be somewhere.

Usually if there is an IT audit, the first question asked is where do you store the $key?

I had to encrypt the key as well with another key stored in one of the variables in VB. VB programs are compiled, so no worries there....
