Yes. The EXAMPLE application works fine in my local installation. I can change the field fckeditor_test as I want. I see the toolbars (fck and tinymce) and I can change color, style and size of the characters/words.
If I type in the path of the ckeditor.js file in the browser I can see the text of this file in the browser in my application as well as in the xample application.
If you say install: I extracted the files coming with the download. Do I have to sign in my application somewhere? Maybe the path in the config file or something else?
