I think I understand now what you mean. But I can't give my domains the same document root because they are for complete different purposes. They both are Joomla! installations with different settings and extensions. My radicore application is sitting in this tree structure. That's why I dont't think that this works. At least I am afraid to cause trouble ...

I have modified the config.inc as you explained. I created a new set of databases which I now will fill with the newest radicore tables and get the new system running.

If you release a new update I have to copy new update files twice, one time in each domain and I have to change radicore system tables twice, too. I think this will be the safest way for me to keep the systems running.

Sorry, that I haven't explained my configuration/construction that well. Thank you for your explanations.
