When you reported "the look has changed" I assumed that you meant the version of the software which you had installed on your own server, not the version which was running on my server.

You can change the look of your own application simply by replacing the CSS files with custom versions. There are some other versions available for demonstration purposes in the download.

That changed look on my website was because I was testing my responsive web add-in for my commercial application where the users want the option to access the application on tablets or mobile phones as well as desktops. It is enabled simply by installing a new directory, with its contents, called 'responsive-web'. This means that the new look can be turned ON or OFF at will as it is not replacing CSS and javascript files, it is accessing them from a different location.

This responsive web option is currently available only to those with a commercial licence as it was constructed for my own commercial application.
