Subject: Re: Parent-Child table relationships
Posted by AJM on Tue, 24 Jul 2007 11:35:52 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

In all the data modeling tools that I have used it has always been the practice to define one-to-many relationships starting from the "one" entity. The primary key field(s) of the "one" entity are then pre-selected, which you then have to link manually to the corresponding foreign key fields in the chosen "many" entity.

Radicore does not use foreign key constraints, therefore it cannot identify foreign key fields automatically.